The Democrat.

This morning we present to our readers the Democrat in a new dress in accordance with our promise made some time since. We ought to have done it sooner, but that common obstacle to great purposes—circumstances—prevented it until now.

It will be seen that we have preferred more reading matter and less paper, which we think, will be acceptable to our numerous readers. Expansion over large areas of paper is a common expedient in making changes, but so far we have observed, not a very satisfactory one to publishers or readers.

Of course, we don't make large promises; we never do but know the Democrat will be superior that everybody will have to take it and read it. The Democrats will all take it as heretofore, because they like it; the anti-Know-Nothing's not so sure. They will read it, otherwise they will not know how bad they are. "Know-thyself" is a first rate admonition and Know-Nothing's ought at least to know themselves. We think passing events have convinced them that some self-knowledge is needed. They have only to read the Democrat to see the truth about them, just as they see their ugly visages when they look into a mirror.

Our carriers will supply the paper at only ten cents per week—cheap—a water for a daily visitor, full of news, and information of all sorts, and we shall see to it that our paper is promptly delivered when ordered.

The Democrat will, in a month or two, commence its twelfth annual volume. It has steadily increased in public favor, and we tender our thanks to its numerous friends for their good will, and intend to deserve even better hereafter.

WE IN EUROPE.

The Vienna Conference has come to an end, and Austria, it is discovered, will not join the Allies against Russia. We are only surprised that any one ever supposed that Austria would abandon the position of neutrality, and thus lose the consequence that now attaches to her position.

She can dictate terms to either party, and Russia has more to offer her than the Allies. She can give her privileges upon the Black Sea, and in its vicinity, that the Allies can never give without the aid of Austria herself, and it is far more to the advantage of Austria to keep on the other side of the Atlantic, than not to engage in a great conflict with the world.

The principle of Austria is interest. In this she is perhaps not singular; but her conduct has rendered her notorious among nations for her unscrupulousness and perfidy.

At present she occupies a position very gratifying to her pride and self-satisfaction. She is courted by both parties, and may hold her position at her pleasure. The Allies can't afford to compel her to join them. The war will languish on, for England and France alone cannot take the Crimeas, or cannot hold it after it is taken. Neither side can afford to make peace, but the war is only a waste of life and treasure to little purpose. It was commenced to restrain the power of Russia, and enhance the importance of England and France.

The great interests of humanity, the cause of liberty, are not the objects on either side. It is a struggle for power, and is likely to end as all such struggles do—scarcely diverging the current of progress of good or evil, to nations or individuals.

The National Intelligencer is out in a very able article in condemnation of the removal of Judge Loring, by the Massachusetts Legislature; but the editor sides over the point as to the party responsible for this outrage. Judge Loring has been removed from office because he would not overturn the law in the case of Burns, the fugitive slave. He did his duty as a judicial officer. For this a Legislature has, by a large vote, dismissed him from the place of Judge of Probate. The act has no apologetics outside of the fanatical crew of Know-Nothing Abolitionists that curse the country with their lawless proceedings. We are glad to see that the press everywhere denounces this act. It is one of those bold and shameless outrages that men are afraid to defend, or invent apologetics for. It is a Legislature resorting to control judicial power, and requiring ministers of the law to interpret it according to popular opinion for the time being. Such acts there is no remedy except in a sound public opinion, of which there is little hope in Massachusetts. Abolitionism, aided by a secret and irresponsible party of Jædists, have entire control of the State. Even the pulpit is desecrated by an enlistment in the same diabolical crew. Let us see if Kentucky will help to sustain, by her aid and comfort, the party that is lost to all sense of shame, and all regard for the most sacred principles of free government.

The editor of the Louisville Journal thinks that the Know-Nothing grand council will meet shortly, and that they will agree to let the slaves question alone, or separate. Oh! the grand council can agree to ignore, just as the Northern Know-Nothing's have been doing all the time. They have been busy ignoring the slavery question.—They have uniformly placed Abolitionists in power. This is precisely what they want to do, and it can be accomplished by ignoring all the better. Indeed, this thing of ignoring is the happiest expedient we have ever devised. The Abolitionists put forward their candidates, good brethren of the order. If any feel a little repugnance to swallowing the candidate, woe and woe, he is told that the slavery question is ignored.—He must know nothing about it, and therefore can't object to a candidate on such a ground. Look to the grand council! We shall have it put forth that the slavery question is ignored, as it was before, and with similar results. The brethren can go home, and place all the Abolitionists in office, as they have done heretofore. The grand council will not agree to separate voluntarily—not they. That would sacrifice the main chance—the opportunity of ruling.

The Tragedy at New Haven—Further

Details.

The telegraph has already furnished a brief account of the shooting of Richard Wright, Saturday afternoon, at New Haven, Conn., by William Clark, a merchant. The New Haven Courier has full details of the tragedy. It states that Clark called at the house of Charles Beers, and borrowed a pistol and two balls from his son, on the pretense that he wanted to kill a cat. The Courier adds:

He shortly after proceeded to the house of Mr. Daniel Bogart, the father-in-law of his victim. He had, at times, been accustomed to do so for several years past. He went into the kitchen, and found there Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wright, the son and daughter of Mr. Bogart, who, seeing him, fled the kitchen and passed into the parlor. Clark followed them, and advancing to the side of Mr. Wright, presented a pistol to his head, and discharged it within a few inches of his ear.

The pistol was presented to the head of Mr. Wright, who, in his alarm, fled into the parlor, resting upon the floor. The ball entered the right ear, and passing through the brain, lodged in the cranium. The ball was still in his head. He fell upon the floor, giving a few groans, and then died. The ball was distinctly heard by persons passing, who were distinctly ordered to assist. Clark looked upon the scene of blood for a moment, and then quietly walked out of the house.

The alarm being quickly spread, officers hurried to the house, in search of the murderer. Mr. Beers, where he deliberately returned the pistol to Mrs. Beers. Mrs. Beers asked him if he had killed the cat, to which he replied: "Yes, I have killed a two-legged cat." A daughter of Mrs. Beers, who had been present, said: "You don't mean, Mrs. Clark, that you have killed a man, do you?" Clark laughed immoderately, and replied: "You'll hear more about it to-morrow."

The officer then proceeded to the store of Clark, where he found him quietly engaged in his usual occupation. He asked him, "What have you been doing to him?" to which he replied, "I don't know." Then told him that he must go along with him to jail, to which Clark replied, "Well, I suppose I must." Clark took a sum of money from his pocket, and coolly handed it to his partner, and gave him a directions to the post office, and then quietly walked out of the store.

The officer then proceeded to the store of Clark, where he found him quietly engaged in his usual occupation. He asked him, "What have you been doing to him?" to which he replied, "I don't know."

Mr. Clark, who had been quieted by the alarm, was then taken into the office of the sheriff, and there he was compelled to admit that he had indeed been guilty of the murder.
